The incredible/strange/wired coincidence:

just on March 25, on the day after the presence of the Bird Flu vehicle in the city there was on the covers of all media the news about the first case of "Vogelgrippe" in Berlin.

This is the unbelievable encounter between art and real daily life!

We are proud to inform you that the first step of the "Bird Flu" project by well-known Italy-based artist Stefano Cagol has ended with a great and unexpected success of media and public, by the involved art museums, during the entire trip from Italy to Germany and at the opening of the Berlin Biennale.

All the project, the trip through contemporary influences into European cities - supported by the Galleria Civica di Arte Contemporanea of Trento as part of "Spot" series, was realized in collaboration with Museion. Museum of Modern and Contemporary Art of Bolzano and Kunstraum Innsbruck, and one of the special events underlined by the Berlin Biennale - is protagonist of a wide documentation material: the white vehicle with black words Bird Flu and the German term Vogelgrippe, and a cockle sound from inside became part of a public demonstration in Munich, passed-by the Nazi Zeppelin Tribune in Nuernberg as symbol of the worst mental influence of recent past, followed with fun along the highway a truck with a big roast chicken on its roof, parked in front of Kunst Werke in Berlin.

The documentation is now presented on-line on the web site of the project, and will be shown at the Galleria Civica di Arte Contemporanea of Trento, at Kunstraum of Innsbruck, in Nuernberg and in Berlin. While the further steps of the project will be the continuation of the trip to Belgium and to UK, to London and Edinburgh.

Bird Flu / Vogelgrippe is "A physical and mental trip into the center of Europe, between real and unreal fears, physical and mental influences."
